ABSTRACT

A surgical tool for doing work inside the body is powered by an electroactive polymer in the form of a transducer. The electroactive polymer is connected to an electrical power source and deforms from an initial position to a different second position upon electrical stimulation. The transducer can make a cavity in bone for internal splints or power a pump.